“ To the family I would really like to say just how sorry I am for your loss. I did not have the opportunity of meeting Bentley, neither did I know your family. I'd like to think that one does not have to personally know someone to offer condolences, because we all realize the pain we feel of losing someone we love and it really comforts us in knowing that others care and share your loss in some way. I cannot begin to say what words could ever bring forth of what you must be feeling. To lose someone we love is one thing, whether a child, a parent, close family or a dear friend. However, to lose them having never even come to know them is yet something that tears at one's heart. We always think of what they could have been, the person they would have become and the personality and love they might have possessed. That is what every parent wants to think of their children. Tears are not a sign of weakness but a sign of caring and when we cry, it tends to make us feel a little bit better. There is no time period on grief or number of tears to cry, neither does weeping mean we have no hope. Remember even Christ wept at the pain he saw Lazarus' death left behind with his family, although he soon knew he would journey there to awaken him. Keep your faith and always trust in God, it was never his desire that we die. He wants to bring an end to death, with a desire greater than our own, and he will. As we await that time, never forget that we are loved and that endurance is not in vain. There is always a reward in the end. You have my condolences and you are in my thoughts. I pray that the God of all comfort, will comfort you and give you the peace that excels all thoughts.
