“ Rebekah was such a sweet kid from the time she was born. She never met a stranger. She was always happy to see you and always wanted to know what you were doing and how you were doing. She was such an inspiration to so many. She taught me that no matter how tough life can be, I can make it through anything as long as I keep my eyes on God. If I ever once felt sorry for myself, watching and reading Rebekah 's post always reminded me that in the worst darkness there is light. The little things I may have stressed over were nothing compared to the adversities Rebekah faced. She smiled and kept giving God the glory when so many of us would have wallowed in pitty. She used her life to glorify God through all of her battles. Rebekah is still such an inspiration to me and so many throughout the world. I say the world because so many loved her and so many that we all will never know the hearts she touched. I am so thankful and feel so blessed to have known Beka. You were beautiful the day you were born and so beautiful the day you went home to see Christ. I know you had a homecoming like no other. Heaven gained the sweetest angel. Love you Beka and thank you for sharing Christ with everyone. Thank you for showing us all how to glorify God even in the midst of darkness.
